The 2011 Fiscal Year might have been a period of difficult challenges for ALCC, but instead it became a year of quiet victories. Like so many other small not-for-profits, we began our fiscal year facing the prospect of a sizable budget deficit due to continued weakness in the economy. Instead, thanks to the strong support of donors and foundation partners who make ALCC’s mission a priority, those deficits never materialized, leaving us in a stronger position today than at any point in our past.

On the outreach front, 2011 was a busy and fruitful year. Our staff conducted 109 legal trainings for consumers and providers, an increase of more than 20% over FY’10. ALCC also continued its role as a leading advocate for people with HIV, particularly in this period of transition for the AIDS Drug Assistance Program and Illinois Cares Rx, programs that many of our clients depend on. With the State now requiring suburban Medicaid recipients to enroll in managed care plans (more on this in the section on advocacy), ALCC is once again on the forefront of the issue, learning what those changes mean for people with HIV and working to make sure those changes are implemented in a way that won’t disrupt clients’ access to medical care. Our joint efforts with the Woodstock Institute brought us another notable victory this year as a major bank agreed to drop nationwide fees that were unfairly hurting people who receive benefit checks directly into their checking accounts, including many people with HIV and other disabilities. Thanks to this joint effort, thousands of low-income people across the nation will owe millions less in bank fees, including many people with HIV who live in Illinois.

Overall, our case numbers declined slightly last year, but as I write this, three months into the 2012 fiscal year, we are already seeing demand pick up, particularly from individuals who need help with public benefits issues. These cases, among the most difficult and time-consuming that we handle, are quickly approaching 50% of our caseload, serving as a stark reminder that stability for those who are sickest and most vulnerable is as elusive and tenuous as ever.

I invite you to read our report and contact me if you’d like to learn how you can help ALCC. Thank you for your support and for believing in our work. It truly makes a world of difference for us and our clients.

Ann Hilton Fisher, Esq.
Executive Director
The decline in demand for services that we observed in 2010 came to a halt during the second half of FY’11. Although ALCC saw fewer clients and opened fewer cases overall, the second half of the fiscal year proved to be remarkably strong, with 809 intakes between January and June. More recent numbers are suggesting that the trend is continuing and FY’12 could be among our busiest on record.

What stands out in these numbers is a significant increase in demand for help with public benefits — a sign that both continuing weakness in the economy and cost-cutting measures at the government level are driving the need for legal help in this area. Until very recently, public benefits cases represented about 37% of our annual caseload. By the end of FY’11, that figure had risen to 46% and in just the first ten weeks of the current year, it has already climbed to 51%. One example of what could be driving the demand: changes in Medicaid that are being introduced in Illinois. Under the new plan, 40,000 suburban seniors and disabled residents are being pushed into two managed care plans, neither of which has an adequate number of HIV specialists, clinics or hospitals to support the large population of people with HIV who are being affected by the change. ALCC staff is busy on various fronts, working with clients to identify favorable plans for their needs and working closely with the plans to enroll more hospitals and providers, and to simplify the process for patients to find the care they need.

With the exception of public benefits, ALCC has seen little movement in other areas of legal assistance. Immigration cases continue to decline, the result of changes in federal policy that now allow for eligible immigrants with HIV to adjust their status without having to apply for an HIV waiver. Estate planning (including wills, powers of attorney and cremation authorizations) continue to be the second most-requested type of legal assistance that we provide, followed by insurance issues, confidentiality and employment. Last year, ALCC helped 856 clients with a total of 1,508 legal problems.

Educating the public about the legal rights of people with HIV is central to the Council’s mission. For this reason, we partner annually with dozens of organizations across the state and deliver critical information about HIV and the law to hundreds of consumers, case managers, students, service providers and professionals in a variety of fields.

Between July 2010 and June 2011, ALCC staff delivered 109 trainings reaching 1,412 individuals, an increase of 21% over last year. As usual, clients and providers were most interested in learning about public benefits and confidentiality, with each making up more than 20% of our training calendar. These were followed by estate planning (17%) and employment (8%). One of the Council’s objectives last year was to expand our outreach to include more providers whose primary focus is not in HIV care. This is a priority because we understand that people with HIV often receive a wide range of services from non-HIV specific providers. In fact, one of our most successful partnerships in this effort has been with Access Community Health Network which serves more than 200,000 individuals in more than 50 community clinics throughout the metropolitan area. Another new partner is Thresholds which provides services to people with severe mental health problems. Our latest figures demonstrate that more than 40% of our clients report mental health issues at the moment of intake.

All trainings are scheduled by our Community Outreach Coordinator, Mary Hankey, and delivered by staff at no charge (in English or in Spanish) to groups throughout the entire metropolitan area. ALCC also publishes a comprehensive set of legal guides (available in English and Spanish) that present concise information on HIV and the law in a way that can be easily understood by clients and their providers. We currently have ten different titles on issues ranging from discrimination and estate planning to employment and HIV-related legal problems for adolescents. These are available at the ALCC office, as well as online at www.aidslegal.com.

In an era of high medical costs and state fiscal crises, it is unfortunately all but inevitable that state legislators will look to cut back on medical programs that serve the poor. In the last legislative session, three programs relied on by low income people with HIV were targets. Income limits were reduced for both Illinois Cares Rx, which providers relief from high Medicare co-pays for seniors and people with disabilities, and for the AIDS Drug Assistance Program, which provides medication to those without access to other sources of payment. Our expertise on these programs, and the recent changes, allows us to be a state-wide resource for individuals with HIV and their service providers.

The poorest and sickest of Illinois residents with HIV are dependent on Medicaid. In March, Illinois began a pilot project that is pushing 40,000 elderly and disabled Medicaid recipients into one of two managed care plans. Even though hospitals and providers were slow to sign up, with many important HIV providers still unavailable through either plan, mandatory enrollment has gone forward. ALCC has worked aggressively with clients, case managers, providers and the plans themselves to ensure that the needs of people with HIV are met during this period. As a result of our advocacy, a number of critical HIV providers have joined the plans, the plans have agreed to allow individual case agreements without restrictions, and at least one of the plans has agreed to designate HIV as a specialty and allow specialists to also be primary care providers for their patients. We have also advocated on behalf of individual patients, including a young man with HIV, hemophilia and brain damage, whose clotting factor could be infused only by one specific nurse. As a result of our advocacy, the managed care plan hired the nurse just so that our patient could continue to receive his clotting factor.

On another front, ALCC partnered with other consumer and disability rights advocates this year to convince Chase Bank to lift a $12 monthly fee on basic checking account customers with direct deposits of at least $500 per month in aggregate from Social Security payments.
The issue arose when one of our clients contacted us after his account was charged $12 per month because he didn’t have a single direct deposit of at least $500 into his checking account, even though he receives two disability payments from the Social Security Administration that total over $500 in aggregate. When the 47-year-old customer asked local bank staff to waive the fee, a bank employee suggested that the client have Social Security “send both checks together,” which is not feasible.

ALCC partnered with the Woodstock Institute to raise the fee issue with Chase Bank, which at the time was undergoing its periodic examination of fair lending practices as required by the federal Community Reinvestment Act (CRA). After the issue was raised with Chase and its federal banking regulator, ALCC, our client and Woodstock staff met with Chase in Chicago where we explained that hundreds of thousands of disability benefit recipients often receive multiple checks of less than $500 at a time, resulting in repeated fees.

On May 13, Chase announced that it had agreed to change its policy so that customers with direct deposit of Social Security payments totaling at least $500 per month in aggregate would qualify for the fee waiver. ALCC and Woodstock Institute thanked Chase Bank for making the policy change decision quickly—a decision that will affect tens of thousands of customers with disabilities all over the country and save them millions of dollars every year. In July, Chase Bank additionally announced that it was waiving fees for all its bank customers with direct deposits totaling more than $500 per month. This added change will provide needed relief to many low-income individuals throughout the country.
Behind all the numbers and the trends are the very real lives of our clients, and the stories that brought them to ALCC for help. Here are just a few of the many people we were able to assist this year:

D A N I E L

Daniel was a long-time client of ALCC who passed away last year. He had worked with various staff members over the years on a variety of public benefits issues and had received help from the Council to settle an employee discrimination suit.

When Daniel called us for the last time, it was clear that his health had deteriorated significantly. He was in the hospital and he wanted our help to establish a power of attorney. We visited him in his hospital room and we were able to execute a power of attorney for health care, for property as well as a will. Since his niece was not present at the moment, he asked if we might return when she was available so that we could answer any questions she might have about the documents before he passed away. We were more than happy to comply and made sure she could get answers to all of her questions.

C A R L O S

Carlos worked for a small liquor store on the southwest side of Chicago until his employer found out his HIV status. He was fired the same day, after his employer told him “if our customers find out, it will be bad for business.” By the time he came to us, Carlos had already filed a complaint pro se discrimination case in federal court and was facing a tight deadline to complete discovery. ALCC sought pro bono help to represent Carlos. Gregory Andrews of Dykema (now at Jackson Lewis) answered the call, filed a federal court appearance, and within a few months secured a cash settlement for Carlos.

J E S S I C A

Jessica is 30 years old, but she cannot lift her arms, even to wash her hair. After suffering a severe injury in a car accident, Jessica was left unable to drive, cook or even lift a plate. She valiantly continued working for seven years as as a help desk agent for an airline, but eventually the pain, the migraines, the short-term memory loss and other conditions including HIV and Polycystic Ovarian Syndrome made it impossible for her to continue. Fearful of losing everything, including her insurance and her apartment, she came to ALCC, looking for help.

Surprisingly, her application for Social Security benefits was denied twice on the grounds that she was still able to perform her work, but ALCC intervened and was able to obtain Social Security Disability and Medicare benefits for her. As a result, not only is she able to stay in her apartment, but Jessica receives $1,100 each month to cover her expenses and still have coverage for her medical care.

C H U C K

Chuck came to us last year because he was having trouble getting his medications for HIV and schizophrenia. Chuck is one of many people with HIV who has been diagnosed with mental health issues. In fact, more than 40% of ALCC clients report some form of mental health problem when they come to us for help.

Chuck had been a client of ALCC in the past, but his mental health issue often meant that he would disappear for long stretches and be lost to follow-up. When he did reappear last year, we learned that he had been placed in a Medicare HMO that was not a feasible option for someone of Chuck’s limited income. ALCC staff immediately got to work to get him out of that plan and into another one that would better suit his medical and financial needs. Now Chuck is covered by Medicare Part D and Illinois Cares Rx and has no difficulty or interruptions receiving his medications.

G R E G

Greg suffers from glaucoma and has been legally blind for more than 20 years. Thanks to his long-term private insurance policy, Greg had been able to access medical care, but when he finally turned 65, he suddenly realized that his long-term disability insurance was expiring, leaving him without access to the medical care he needed for his glaucoma, heart condition, HIV and severe anxiety.

Greg came to ALCC and explained his problem to paralegal Kate Miller who helped him arrange alternate medical coverage through Medicare and then, within two weeks, helped to resolve some additional problems so that he could continue to get his prescription medications in the future. Greg was approved for both Medicaid and Medicare and now has minimal costs for any of his medicines.
